Fitzgerald's views merit even more than sticking your head in sand

Fitzgerald's turn of phrase that "Democrats are responsible for the mess in our country" and "Democrats are the ones who are going to lose the election in 2002" is a classic example of this. It is a simple, concise way of communicating a complex idea. It is also a way of evoking a feeling of guilt or shame in the viewer.

A comprehensive strategy that addresses the root causes of terrorism and极端ism must incorporate the following elements:

Third, the identification of vulnerable and isolated terrorist groups can lead to irrational conclusions. For example, in response to the 2001 attacks, al-Qaeda was greatly weakened and its training camps in Afghanistan. With the spread of resentment generated by the presence of foreign troops, many of its leaders, including Ayro, had fled to Afghanistan. As a result, the organization's influence and capabilities have declined exponentially in recent times.

Fourth, the legal system must be strengthened to ensure that people are consulted on committees tasked with preventing and combating terrorism. In particular, the courts and the police must be involved in determining whether groups such as al-Qaeda and al-Shabab are able to directly threaten Australia by activating "sleeper cells" and other underground networks. With the rise of non-state terrorist organizations, the role of the courts and the police in preventing and combating terrorism is crucial.

Finally, it is essential that awareness-raising campaigns and public information efforts are expanded to ensure that the public is informed about the dangers of terrorism and extreme violence. This awareness-raising campaign must be backed by strong legal frameworks and effective law enforcement measures.

In conclusion, a comprehensive strategy that addresses the root causes of terrorism and extreme violence must incorporate the following elements:

1. Awareness-raising campaigns and public information efforts must be expanded to ensure that the public is informed about the dangers of terrorism and extreme violence.
2. The legal system must be strengthened to ensure that people are consulted on committees tasked with preventing and combating terrorism.
3. The courts and the police must be involved in determining whether groups such as al-Qaeda and al-Shabab are able to directly threaten Australia by activating "sleeper cells" and other underground networks.
4. Awareness-raising campaigns and public information efforts must be expanded to ensure that the public is informed about the dangers of terrorism and extreme violence. This awareness-raising campaign must be backed by strong legal frameworks and effective law enforcement measures.

In summary, a comprehensive strategy that addresses the root causes of terrorism and extreme violence must incorporate the following elements:

1. Awareness-raising campaigns and public information efforts must be expanded to ensure that the public is informed about the dangers of terrorism and extreme violence.
2. The legal system must be strengthened to ensure that people are consulted on committees tasked with preventing and combating terrorism.
3. The courts and the police must be involved in determining whether groups such as al-Qaeda and al-Shabab are able to directly threaten Australia by activating "sleeper cells" and other underground networks.
4. Awareness-raising campaigns and public information efforts must be expanded to ensure that the public is informed about the dangers of terrorism and extreme violence. This awareness-raising campaign must be backed by strong legal frameworks and effective law enforcement measures.